Stacie discovered her passion for education early while volunteering in a kindergarten classroom during her high school years. She earned her B.S. in Elementary Education and her M.A. in Educational Leadership and Supervision while in Las Vegas. Over her career, she has served as a teacher, curriculum specialist, assistant principal, and principal in Las Vegas before relocating to Idaho.

In 2011, following the passing of their father, Stacie and her sister, Shannon, founded the Inukai Family Foundation in his memory. The foundation was created to honor their father's legacy of generosity, hard work, and community spirit.

As a breast cancer survivor, Stacie is deeply grateful for her health and the community that supported her through her journey. She is actively involved in her church, Stonehill, where she finds joy in serving others and growing in faith.

Stacie and her husband, Shane, have been married for 35 years and live in Boise, Idaho. Their daughter, Shayne, is a full-time photographer and married to Camille who currently attends medical school. Their younger daughter, Maddison, will soon graduate from high school and plans to attend Boise State University to study Nursing.

In her spare time, Stacie enjoys boating, snow skiing, reading, exercising and traveling with her family.
